GROW BEANS, UNCLE SAM'S ADVICE IN FOOD PRODUCTION CAMPAIGN

In the first of a series of special bulletins being put out by the federal experiment station in this territory for the information of the citizen on how the food crop can be increased, beans of over a dozen varieties, are recommended for planting. The bulletin will be published in the near future, and gives in detail the process of choosing a proper place, planting, raising, and harvesting the crop.

Because they can be preserved when there is no ready market and because their food value is very high, and transportation more economical, beans are regarded as an especially good food to raise. They are generally hardy and do well with comparatively little care.

"Beans do best in a warm, mellow soil with a moderate amount of well decomposed organic matter and moisture to induce rapid growth. While the crop will thrive on a great variety of soils, one inclined to be of a silty nature, such as the soil of the Kula region on Maui, is of distinct advantage.

"No irrigation is necessary where the rainfall is as much as 15 inches during the three or four months of growing season for the beans. Where irrigation is necessary, a weekly application of water should be made unless surface tillage immediately after the irrigation is practiced to conserve the moisture.

"Unless the soils are very fertile, and well supplied with available phosphates, it has been found that either the superphosphates or the reverted form drilled in at the time of the planting at the rate of say 250 pounds per acre is a very profitable practice."

The bulletin gives detailed instructions on how, where, and what to plant, and on the marketing of the product. The following table gives details on how to plant:

FIVE-CENT LUNCHEON FOR NORMAL SCHOOL STUDENTS RETURNS PROFIT

Eats are Prepared By Girls Who Are Assigned Work as Part of Their Course

A recent lunch which Cyril O. Smith, director of the summer school for teachers, says is one of the greatest things that has been done in the territory for the young people in the schools, is now being served regularly at the Normal school. That it is both practical and profitable and can be instituted in all of the schools of the islands where there is any training in domestic science is demonstrated by the work which has been going on here, he says.

Over 100 lunches of enough potato salad, boiled ham, bread and butter, to satisfy the hunger of any average person, were sold to students at noon Monday. For 10 cents a good-sized dish of ice cream was added. After all expenses, had been paid for, there was still $1.39 left, which was clear profit.

The six girls in the domestic science department of the Normal school under the supervision of Miss Tulsan V. Choy, a graduate of the Academy of Sacred Hearts in Kaimuki, prepare the lunch. They buy the food, prepare it, and serve it as part of their work in the course.

At the noon hour the students come to the room where the plates are arranged on a large table. Upon presentation of a lunch ticket, which they buy early, they are given their lunch and can take in wherever they choose. The faculty of the school eat the same lunch at a long table arranged near the kitchen.

"At Lahaina, where I was for a short time, we used to serve a 25-cent lunch to the small children," said Miss Choy, who is the manager of this little lunch room, "and there we always made enough for expenses. Of course, anybody who chooses to, can eat here, but, as a rule, we have only the students of the school at our five-cent lunches."

Following the opening of the summer school for teachers at the Normal school yesterday nine more have registered, and the total number enrolled now stands 419.

"This shows a great increase for this season," said Cyril O. Smith, director of the session, this morning, "for last year the total enrollment was about 175."

"A great many are coming from the grammar schools which have just let out. Most of the students are Hawaiian girls," declared Mr. Smith.

One woman is registered in the class in shop work, in which the pupils are taught carpentry. She is Mrs. Katherine Cockett from Maui.

Much attention is being paid to special instruction in agriculture as part of the course in the training of teachers. Special plots of ground will be devoted to this study.

RESERVATIONS EARLY FOR SACRAMENTO FAIR

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—Although the state fair will not be held until September, applications for seats already are being filed with the board of directors, establishing a record for early reservations. Applications are not only for grand stand boxes but for boxes at the horse show, one of the big features of fair week.

The directors are considering the purchase of a large wooden tabernacle recently used here for revival meetings, to be torn down, moved to the fair grounds and rebuilt to house some of the county exhibits.

BIJOU PROGRAM DRAWING CROWDS

A big program of vaudeville and pictures at the Bijou theater continues a strong drawing card at "popular" prices. "The Flying Mayos" are well entitled to such billing as their work on the flying-trapeze brings the audience to wonder how it can be done without wings. Miss Adeline Aflague sings some of the latest mainland song successes and dances most charmingly. C. Marshall, billed as "The Startling Cartoonist," is all of that and handles his crayons like a past-master.

Alice Joyce is the leading star in the photodrama, "Whom the Gods Destroy," and, as might easily be anticipated, the plot is woven around the old adage—they first make mad. The star is ably supported by Harry T. Morey and Marc MacDermott. The story deals with the love of two men—soldiers—for one girl and with civil warfare, topics that never fail to produce interesting film drama. "Shrine Night" was observed at the Bijou theater last evening and the memorial sack of flour was disposed of at a fabulous figure, the proceeds to go to the Red Cross fund. Shrine-drama was out in force and the Bijou theater was packed to the doors, a special program having been prepared for the occasion.

REEL THRILLER COMES TO HAWAII

Norma Talmadge, one of the leading stars of Triangle-Fine Arts productions, a Thomas H. Ince "discovery," comes to the Hawaii theater this evening in a gripping drama entitled, "The Children of the House." Great thrills and strong dramatic situations abound throughout the offering. Amongst the former might be mentioned the spectacle of an auto-load of bank robbers plunging, after a flying battle with police, over a steep precipice 300 feet high.

The plot of the story revolves around a faithful wife and a faithless husband and the appeal of the children which finally bears fruit. There is a "vamp" in the offering and this role is essayed by Jewel Carmen, a rising young star whose work will be worth following. There is also a quartet of children whose work is heralded as above the average.

Neglected wives are promised a treat in this newest of Triangle dramas, as the husband who insists on being a night-bird comes to an untimely end in time to allow the finale of the story to get into the class of "lived happy ever afterwards." "His Bitter Pill" is not a medicine advertisement but the title of the Keystone Comedy that will also be on the Hawaii program tonight.

"HIS SWEETHEART" BIDS FAREWELL

"His Sweetheart" leaves the Liberty theater after the performance of this evening and with its departure there goes one of the most sadly-sweet pictures shown at that popular playhouse in a long time. George Beban, imitable impersonator of the lowly Italian characters, essays the leading role and is ably supported by an Oliver Morosco cast. Helen Jerome Eddy and Sarah Kernan score most effectively, the former in the role of his little Italian sweetheart—afterwards his wife—and the latter as his "forever sweetheart"—his "mama mia." All three are strong character parts and all are ably handled.

Particularly interesting in this, as in a majority of the productions from the Morosco studios, are the captions. All are beautifully illuminated in a manner fitting the subject treated. They prove a rare treat when compared to the usual plain printed intimation of the scenes to follow.

"Pearl of the Army" also closes with this evening's performance and anyone who has followed this thrilling serial should not miss the final episode, as the revelations are most startling and the doubtful identity of several individuals is cleared up in a most remarkable manner.
